Rathbones risk strategies

Inflation is measured as the UK Consumer Price Index. Sterling cash is measured as SONIA (the sterling overnight average index). Historical drawdown (period 30 June 2002 to 30 June 2022) is used to indicate the strategy's risk level. The performance of each strategy can be compared to the applicable Rathbones benchmark.

The table shows the asset breakdown of our six risk strategies. Each risk strategy is constructed and managed in line with our distinctive LED (Liquidity, Equity-type risk, and Diversifiers) investment framework. This focuses on the relationship between different types of assets. The client's portfolio is constructed to meet their specific investment objectives, and the LED allocations shown for each risk level may therefore deviate slightly. Further detail on the six Rathbone benchmarks can be found at Rathbones.com/benchmarks or from your investment manager. All bespoke portfolios benefit from Rathbones' robust investment process and research capability across both traditional and sustainable investment markets, together with the knowledge and experience of the Investment Manager.
